I am fully supportive of the Yucca Mountain Project and its implementation at the earliest possible time.

The project needs to complete all of the scientific studies and evaluations to assure that the site will be safe. I have experience and knowledge from 12 years as the engineering manager for Westinghouse for the development of the Waste Isolation Pilot Plant (WIPP) transuranic waste repository in New Mexico. Therefore, I am well aware of the difficulties, but also confident that the studies can be successfully completed. The project can be constructed and operated safely.

Relative to the transport of the nuclear waste, the transportation is probably some of the safest in the world. The risks involved with nuclear waste transportation are far less than that of so much other material that moves on our highways and railroads every day. The dangers have been exaggerated by anti-nuclear factions to try and defeat the waste repository. Science and facts should prevail and the project should move forward.
